Opposed to Bond Issue.

A majority of the democratic leaders appear to be opposed to a bond issue. They see no reason why the question of additional taxation, which is inevitable with a large army and navy, shall not be met now. The sale of bonds would take care of the increased expenditures for a year or so, but as the administration program contemplates spending a billion or more dollars inside of five or six years it is not felt wise to meet all this with bonds.

Employes of Two Departments to Be Favored Wednesday.

The politics of extra taxation is that the democrats will be able to assert that they were compelled to impose these taxes because the country demanded better conditions for national defense. The taxes will be sufficient to cover the yearly deficit that has been pilling up for the last two years. The republicans will be hard put to draw the line as between national defense and deficit. The democrats, through Secretary McAdoo, claim that the deficit is comparatively small and that there would have been none but for the unsettled conditions due to the European war. The republicans claim that if there were no defense legislation at the coming session the democrats would have to impose extra taxes to meet their alleged mismanagement of finances.

Dr. Calvo had always been regarded as one of the ablest of the Latin American diplomats accredited to Washington, and his friends characterized him succeeded in August as minister here by Senor Don Manuel Castro Quesada, after a service here as minister since 1896. In all this nineteen years no difficulty of importance ever arose between Costa Rica and the United States, difficulty of importance ever arose between Costa Rica and the United States, owing, it is stated, largely to Dr. Calvo's ability to void difficult situations, and the fact that by reason of his long residence here he had become practically a Washingtonian, in exceedingly close touch with all that went on here. Dr. Calvo enjoyed the confidence and respect of succeeding administrations at Washington. He was a great believer in the idea of a possible "United States of Central America," to be formed of the republics of Guatemala, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras and Salvador. He took a leading part in bringing the pan-American nations together, and was a delegate to the first pan-American meeting held here in 1889. He was a member of the Central American peace commission held in Washington in 1907, while Elihu Root was Secretary of State, under which the Central American countries adjusted their own differences with one another and as a consequence of which there has been comparative peace in that region of the world since.

SEE SPLIT IN RANKS OF REPUBLICANS

Joaquin Bernardo Calvo. Late Democratic Leaders Say East Will Make Fight on Western Element.

> McCORMICK'S WARNING IS CITED AS INDICATION

Politicians Say "Standpatters" Will Insist on Dictating the Nomination in 1916.

Democratic leaders, who are vatching with closest scrutiny the development of republican presidential politics, are of the opinion that the "grand old party" is not vet out of the woods into which it was led through the split between the progressives and the regulars. They say the republican national convention will disclose widely diverging views upon available candidates, and that there is an almost even chance that the final selection of the convention will be unacceptable to a large section of the slowly reuniting republican party. They base this prediction upon the statement that the eastern wing of the party is bent upon taking over the party in the interest of big business and finance, nominating a man corresponding to their type, and that the western republicans are equally determined to insist upon a candidate who shall have none of the earmarks of the reactionary.

Point to McCormick Warning.

Democrats of importance here attached deep significance to the warning is-sued last week by Medill McCormick, after his talk with Col. Roosevelt, of the consequences which will follow the the consequences which will follow the nomination of an ultra standpatter by the republican convention. They construed that utterance to be the voicing of the sentiment of a large body of republicans who are desirous of returning to the old party, but only upon the ironclad condition that progressive principles and prejudices be recognized in the selection of a candidate.

Democrats say there is a disposition in the selection of a candidate.

Democrats say there is a disposition at this time on the part of eastern republicans to parallel the description of the Bourbons, who "never learned anything, never forgot anything." These democrats think that the "old guard" is seeking to saddle and mount and ride again, and they confidently look for a demonstration in the convention of an overbearing spirit by this faction.

Expect Reactionary Control.

From their own reports, these demo ratic political managers are apprise publicans of the west to send a nu merically powerful contingent of progressive delegates to the national
